Dollar is 'chief culprit' in U.S. trade deficit

By Butch Larcombe
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The overvalued American dollar is the "chief culprit" in the $36.8 billion U.S. trade deficit, the Japanese ambassador to the United States said Thursday night.

Yoshio Okawara, speaking as the Mansfield lecturer in International Relations, said that the overvalued dollar means that American products are overpriced, making them less competitive in world markets. The strong dollar also allows the United States to buy goods cheaply from other countries, fueling the deficit, he said. The trade deficit "reflects lagging exports and surging imports," Okawara said.

Okawara, speaking to about 700 people in the University Center ballroom, said that the dollar's overvaluation is the result of U.S. fiscal and monetary policies, specifically federal budget deficits and high domestic interest rates.

American criticism of Japanese import quotas is unfair, Okawara said. Japan will expand beef imports from 30,- 000 tons to 58,400 tons over the next four years, he said, adding that citrus imports would also increase. Okawara also pointed out that the United States maintains quotas on Japanese automobiles and imported textiles. The Japanese-American trade relationship must be a "two-way street," he said.

Competition with Japan is helping the United States, Okawara said. The modernization of the U.S. steel and automobile industry and the resulting efficiency is the result of Japanese influence, he maintains. Okawara also pointed out that the United States is making similar contributions to the Japanese economy.

Okawara was introduced by Montana Sen. Max Baucus, who recently returned from Japan. In an afternoon press conference, Baucus stressed the importance of the U.S.-Japanese trade relationship. Japan is second to Canada in the amount and value of goods traded with the United States, he said. Trade with Japan "will be the wave of the future" for the United States and other countries, Baucus said.

Okawara, who became ambassador to the United States in 1980, has announced that he will leave foreign service in March. Speaking in the lecture series was a means of honoring his American counterpart in Japan, Mike Mansfield, he said.

Characterized as a "shrewd trader" by Baucus, Okawara has been credited with reducing tensions between the United States and Japan that have arisen because of the trade deficit. Despite his retirement, Okawara will remain a "strong force" in U.S.-Japanese relations, Baucus said.

No funding to fine-arts groups

By Kevin Twidwell
Kaimin Reporter

The ASUM Executive Committee recommended that three University of Montana fine-arts groups receive no ASUM funding for the 1985-86 academic year in its budget recommendation released Wednesday.

The Executive Committee, which consists of the ASUM president, vice president and business manager, released its budget recommendation after spending approximately one week reviewing budget requests and hearing testimony from 53 campus organizations.

The UM Chamber Chorale, UM Chamber Orchestra and UM Symphonic Band had all requested ASUM funding but were not allocated any funds because the committee didn't agree with the way the groups proposed to spend the requested money.

The Chamber Orchestra and the Symphonic Band had requested money for trips designed to recruit students for UM and the Chamber Chorale requested funds to fly from Vienna, Austria to Ankara, Turkey during a tour next year.

ASUM President Phoebe Patterson said funding for these trips should not come from activity fees paid by students, but from other sources.

She said the funding for groups travelling and performing to recruit students for UM should come from the UM administration, the music department or from money raised by the groups through fundraising activities or grants.

Patterson said the decision by the committee is not "anti-fine arts" nor does the decision reflect the value of the groups to the university. However, she said she doesn't feel that it is appropriate to fund groups "that want to take the activity fee and leave."

If the groups want to perform at the university so UM students can benefit, ASUM would then provide some funding for the groups, she said.

The Symphonic Band had requested $7,145 to finance its annual tour of state high schools to recruit students. Terry Vermillion, a member of the band, said his group is "pretty disappointed" about the committee's recommendation.

Vermillion said the band isn't able to obtain money from the the music department, the UM administration or from local businesses. "We've gone everywhere we can think of and turned to ASUM (for funding) as a last resort," he said.

Vermillion said the funding is needed because the band promotes a positive image of UM to high school students on its performing tours.

"I don't feel that ASUM should support us, but we have no where else to go," he said.

Reagan's budget cuts would bleed college students

By Judi Thompson
Kaimin Reporter

If Congress approves President Reagan's proposed student aid budget cuts, 60 percent of the students at the University of Montana could lose much-needed money for their college educations.

The budget, introduced earlier this week, proposes to cut $2.3 billion in federal grants, loans, and other financial assistance programs for more than one million college students.

According to Dorothy Kinsley, the Associate Director of Financial Aids, 60 percent of the students at UM receive some type of federal financial aid through National Direct Student Loans, Pell Grants, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, State Student Incentive Grants, College Work Study, or Guaranteed Student Loans.

Students at UM received approximately $11 million from federal sources this year, Kinsley said, including almost $6 million in GSLs. The GSL program is the one specifically targeted for the cuts, Kinsley said. Already, she explained, the Financial Aid Office has processed 3,300 GSL applications. If the program is cut, "more than 25 percent of the student body could be affected."

In the past two years, the GSL program has "mushroomed," she said. Last year, "$5.5 million in GSL's were granted to UM students," she said, but added that she did not know the number of students who received those loans. This year the figure is closer to $6 million, Kinsley said.

Graduate students may suffer, Kinsley said, because "they rely heavily on GSL's since they aren't eligible for other

Sexist graphics

EDITOR: Congratulations to William Spencer for his art work on the 1985 Forester's Ball poster: good graphics!

However, immense numbers of boos to both him and the "Pushes" in the undergraduate Forestry school, who put on the Ball, for their silly sexist conceptions. The student population of the School of Forestry, grad and undergrad, runs about 30-35 percent female, many of them working foresters just like the guys, sometimes with corks and hadhats (but few cigars).

The picture on the poster of a potbellied lazy (male) forester being entertained by a topless hula girl, while it may be a common fantasy for some of the 65-70 percent, does not quite represent the fantasies of the rest of us.

Palm trees yes, a cool rum yes, but the jerk with the suspenders and the tattoo is all too familiar to be anything but a cold winter reality. Whose "logger's delight" is this? (Besides, foresters are not all loggers — there are those of us who grow trees, and others of us who figure out what it takes to grow them, and why they do or don't).

Hopefully that graphic silliness is not what the rest of the university community is left with as its picture of forestry, relative either to gender or function.

Baer backlash

EDITOR: As the Chair of the MontPIRG Board of Directors, I'd like to clear up some misconceptions about MontPIRG that were illogically presented by Keith (The Griz) Baer in his Feb. 1 letter to the editor.

Keith, as a former board member, you should remember that the original petition drive creating MontPIRG was in 1981, not 1982 as you stated. A majority of the full-time UM students did sign the original petition of support for MontPIRG. Full-time, or FTE, students is not a make-believe idea created by MontPIRG. It is the accepted way the Montana Legislature budgets for the university system and MontPIRG chose to use FTE also. This substantial and unprecedented support for a student organization, including endorsements from ASUM, Faculty Senate and President Bucklew, was never contested. Keith, are you implying that something of a questionable nature surrounds this support?

Keith, I'm a student and the Chair of MontPIRG. As a full-time student I have limitations on the amount of time I can spend in the MontPIRG office. C.B. Pearson, MontPIRG's executive director, is hired by the MontPIRG Board of Directors annually to work for students at UM. He may also be fired by the Board if it doesn't like his work. MontPIRG would be much less effective and students would have much less power if we did not have staff working for us. Having paid staff is normal practice for many UM student groups including ASUM and the Kaimin.

As for C.B.'s contract, Keith, as a senior in business management you should know that the director (or manager) of any organization (or corporation) must have the authority to hire and fire staff. As for the personnel committee recommendation, that was amended by the full board. Rather than indicating a lack of student control, this emphasizes the fact that the Board of Directors is a democratic group that cannot be swayed by the poorly conceived notions of one member of the board. Committee recommendations are meant to be considered and revised, not just blindly accepted.

Lastly, I cannot agree with your statement that UM and Montana would be better off without MontPIRG. MontPIRG provides many valuable services such as our consumer hotline, information on landlord/tenant rights, testimony against unjustified utility rate increases and also registering people to vote, to name only a few.

MontPIRG is too valuable to lose. Petitions are still being circulated. If you haven't signed yet, find a petitioner or come over to the MontPIRG office and add your name to the 3,500 other students who support MontPIRG.

Coppola's 'Cotton Club': nostalgia without guilt, almost

By John Kappes
Kaimin Special Sections Editor

The Cotton Club
Directed by Francis Coppola
Starring Richard Gere
Roxy Theater
Grade: B

What is Francis Coppola up to? Lately, his keen eye and sure sense of composition seem to be his biggest enemies. It's as though, having made movies like "The Conversation" and "Apocalypse Now" in the Seventies, he wants to atone for their success—and for their compelling pessimism about American society—with a celebratory movie just as potent. The trouble is, he's lost his balance.

Review

In "The Conversation," for example, he had a story resilient enough to contain both his intentions (dark) and his technique (nervous and accomplished). But when he turned a wistful eye toward Americana two years ago, with "The Outsiders" and "Rumble Fish," his visual virtuosity overwhelmed his mawkish, undistinguished scripts. We were left with a vague lyricism, evocative of something, but... vague.

Now there's "The Cotton Club," a friendly, opulent ($50-million) portrait of Harlem's Jazz Age. There is, again, a lot to look at here. But there is also the familiar feeling of overkill, a lack of red meat, that makes one wonder how long form can go on without content.

In "The Cotton Club," form gets away with at least its share. Coppola's re-creation of the mood and style of the Harlem Thirties, together with a well-chosen soundtrack, holds our interest in a story that can't begin to match their elegance or sophistication. "Everything in the movie is true," Coppola has said. If so, it must have taken tremendous discipline—as he and Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist William Kennedy typed draft after draft of the script—to make the truth so dull.

Richard Gere is Dixie Dwyer, a musician who befriends slinky Diane Lane in a speakeasy. Sparks fly. He saves the life of Dutch Schultz (James Remar), a mob boss. She ends up living with "the Dutchman," a plaything.

Meanwhile, at the Cotton Club, we meet dancer Gregory Hines and singer Lonette McKee, who in turn meet each other. Sparks fly.

Finally, after a gang war in the Harlem numbers racket and Gere's transformation into a Hollywood star (he makes a film called "Mob Boss"), there is a climactic scene in the club that involves everyone.

Lane's Vera is sassy and fresh, a sensual mixture of self-interest and unsullied emotion. Hines is a powerful dancer, and his finely-honed comic sensibility is unmatched here. McKeon's Angelina, modeled on Lena Horne, comes off too upright, although her voice is another welcome diversion from the surrounding menace.

Remar plays the Dutchman like a pro, complete with Cagney whine, but the character's pompous self-promotion grates more and more as the movie wears on. It's intended to. Still, Coppola's attitude toward Dutch shows a wavering here felt throughout the film. How much should we take literally, how much as Style, as self-conscious Gangster Revival?

Richard Gere struggles as Dwyer; he has struggled in most of his movies. This time the problem is not so much Gere's poker-faced smirking as Coppola's mess of a screenplay. Gere drifts in and out of scenes, tuxedo here, dark glasses there. His character suffers most from the threat of a plot implosion: without a center, all his bustle and activity just might collapse in on itself.

What saves him is Coppola's uncanny ability to persuade by image alone, his talent for making atmosphere do the work of a (missing) literature script. Cab Calloway, the Duke's "Jungle Nights in Harlem" and Michael Smuin's choreography—Smuin is an ex-Missoulian—conjure a nostalgia without guilt. Close, anyway.

The Director's Showcase performs this weekend

By Rob Buckmaster
Kaimin Entertainment Editor

Young directors directing young actors are the focus this weekend at the University of Montana. A newcomer to the Drama department called Director's Showcase will present two one-acts, Dylan Thomas' "Under Milkwood" and A.R. Gurney's "The Love Course," this Friday and Saturday, February 8 and 9 at 8 p.m. in the Masquer Theater.

Preview

Director's Showcase is a forum to stage work by student actors and directors in a performance situation. The student directors are responsible for everything: they cast their own shows, schedule rehearsals, formulate blocking and a million other duties.

The two student directors this quarter are junior Sean Walbeck and senior Sarah Alling. Both are English/Drama majors. They are directing these shows as the practical portion of their Advanced Directing class.

Any interested student can audition for Showcase. The auditions are held at the beginning of every quarter and the shows have a five-week rehearsal period. To Sean Walbeck, director of "The Love Course," it's tough: "After casting, it's the normal rigmarole of rehearsing when you can, finding space as it becomes available, and just plain work, work, work."

Sarah Alling, who is directing "Under Milkwood," is doing the show as part of her senior project in the Drama department.

There are more than 20 students involved in both productions. After the shows, the faculty of the Drama department will hold an informal critique to comment on the students' work.

Both one-acts play each night. There is no admission, and the productions are open to the public.

Lady Griz face UI and EWU in key MWAC games

By Eric Williams

Kaimin Sports Reporter

If the Lady Griz are going to win their third straight Mountain West basketball title, Coach Robin Selvig said they'll have to do it themselves. Now.

UM takes on Idaho tonight and Eastern Washington Saturday night and Selvig said this weekend "is our only chance to help ourselves." Both games start at 5:45 in Dahlberg Arena.

He said it is imperative that UM win both contests to have a chance at winning the conference and thus host the league tournament. The Lady Griz are 5-2 in league play going into tonight's game, while Idaho and EWU are tied for first with 6-1 marks.

Selvig said the reason UM must beat both teams is that there's "not a very good chance that anyone else will dump them. They're both very good teams."

To beat Idaho and EWU, the teams UM lost to earlier this season, Selvig is looking for another balanced offensive game and a much improved defensive effort over the games in Moscow and Cheney. On that road trip, in which the Lady Griz began the conference season with a pair of losses, UM allowed both teams to shoot 60 percent from the floor and score over 80 points.

Selvig said keeping the teams below those figures "will be a real challenge to our defense," in part because both teams are averaging over 80 points a game in league play. He has noted several times that UM's defense has been quicker in recent games and the team has "matured" defensively.

Selvig said he is happy with the squad's offense since the MWAC season started, including the losses at Idaho and EWU, where UM shot over 50 percent from the floor. Balance has been UM's trademark of late, particularly last weekend when four players scored in double figures in a 77-48 thrashing of Montana State.

Early in the season, UM seemed to ride on the shoulders of junior center Sharla Muralt (14.7 points, 8.4 rebounds) and senior guard Barb Kavanagh (12.4 points, 4.9 assists), but Selvig said, "I don't think we're dependent on any one particular player all that much any more."

Senior forward Anita Novak, who got off to a mediocre start, is averaging 15.3 points in Mountain West competition, three points a game more than she did in pre-season play.

Idaho and EWU are balanced squads also, according to Selvig. Although both have star players, he emphasized that UM's defense can't collapse on one player because their other starters are so strong and experienced.

only 2.6 points fewer than is Souther at 11 a contest. EWU's leading scorer and floor general is All-America candidate Lisa Comstock, who is hitting for over 18 points and is handing out nearly 8 assists a game.

Idaho is led by a pair of 6-foot-4 starters in Mary Raese and Mary Westerwelle. Selvig has said Raese may be the top player in the MWAC and she is averaging 19.2 points and 10.1 boards a contest.

Griz look for two against UI, BSU

By Mike Olinger
Kaimin Sports Editor

The UM men's basketball team starts the second go-round of the Big Sky Conference season this weekend with a game tonight in Dahlberg Arena against the University of Idaho and another tomorrow with Boise State. Tip-off for each game is at 8.

The Grizzlies are 17-4 overall, 5-2 in the Big Sky, and are tied with Northern Arizona, Weber State and Nevada-Reno for the conference lead.

Grizzly Head Coach Mike Montgomery said that Idaho is a better team now than when UM defeated them 60-54 in Moscow earlier this season. UI won its first game of the season last weekend against Idaho State, 95-69, without the services of sophomore center Steve Ledesma. Ledesma left the team at Christmas but was allowed to rejoin the team for the league season. Last week however, Head Coach Bill Trumbo removed him from the team because of recent conflicts.

Idaho is led in scoring by forward Ulf Spears' 15.1 points per game and Frank Garza's 13.7. The 6-foot-6 Garza is now playing center and leads the team with 5.6 boards a game.

Boise State, 11-8 overall and 2-5 in conference, is also coming off a big victory last weekend having defeated the Weber State Wildcats 63-60 in Boise.

The "frenzy" man-to-man defense that the Broncos play will probably be of little help to them in UM's arena according to Montgomery. "That type of defense takes a lot of energy and intensity that is difficult to maintain when you're not at home," he said. "They may try to play it for a while but it won't last for long."

The Grizzlies defeated the Broncos 61-51 in Boise earlier this season to open the Big Sky season. BSU has three scorers averaging in double figures with Frank Jackson at 11.9 points, Roland Smith at 11.4 and Bruce Bolden at 10.9. Bolden leads his team in rebounding with 7.6 per game.

The Grizzlies and the Big Sky are led in scoring and rebounding by junior forward Larry Krystkowiak with 21.6 and 10.3 boards a game. Larry McBride is next for UM with 10.9 points and 5.5 blocks and leads the conference with 50 blocked shots.

Fairness vs. privacy focus of new draft bill

By Jeff McDowell
Kaimin Legislative Reporter

HELENA— Fairness versus privacy was the focus of the debate Thursday before the House Judiciary Committee.

The committee heard testimony regarding House Bill 502 which would allow the state to provide driver's license lists to the Selective Service which would use the lists to assure compliance with draft registration.

The committee took no action on the bill which is sponsored by Rep. Kelly Addy, D-Billings.

Robert Cummins, deputy state director for the Selective Service, said the issue is fairness and that "all those who should register must register."

However, the American Civil Liberties Union, the only opponent at the hearing, protested that providing the information is an invasion of privacy.

Cummins said the draft lottery "is the opposite of a lottery where you want as few people involved as possible in order to win. In the draft, (the individual wants) as many people in it as possible in order not to be selected."

Any male born after Jan. 1, 1960, is required to register. About 45,000 Montanans have registered, Cummins said, while only about 400 to 500 have not, about one percent.

Registration is required in order to obtain federal job training and education benefits.

Attorney General Mike Greely last year denied a request by the Selective Service for the lists.

Greely denied the request because it would have violated state law regarding the release of information and also because he considered it a violation of state constitutional guarantees of the right of privacy.

"The object is fairness," he said. "It wouldn't be fair to you if you were drafted because someone else didn't register."

The Selective Service checks registration when eligible men apply for certain federal benefits. Cummins also said the Selective Service had tracked down some men who had not registered by obtaining lists of names from Jostens, a jewelry company which sells high school and college class rings nationwide.

Susan Cottingham, an ACLU lobbyist, said the issue is privacy.

"One percent isn't going to add that much to the lottery pool," she said. "It is just another government intrusion into our private lives. People don't apply for driver's licenses in order to register for the draft. It will just undermine trust in state government."

Butch Turk, a lobbyist for the Peace Legislator Coalition, said after the hearing that the fairness issue can be turned around.

"It's not fair to invade the privacy of 99 percent of the people to catch one percent," he said.

Larry Majerus, administrator of the Motor Vehicle Division of the Department of Justice, speaking neither for nor against the bill told the committee that two sections of law now apply to releasing information.

Information regarding vehicles is available, he said, while information regarding driver's licenses is not.

The maximum federal penalty for not registering is five years in prison and a $10,000 fine, which Cummins said is "quite a bit more serious than the penalty for driving without a license."

Police initiate gambling crackdown

By Janice Zabel
Kaimin Reporter

The Missoula City Police Department seized unlicensed gambling devices from The Rodeo Company and closed down a live keno game at the Heidelberg Thursday evening, according to Cliff LePiane, a Missoula city detective.

"We confiscated two pinball-type bingo machines and one keno machine from The Rodeo Company and we closed down an unlicensed live keno game at the Heidelberg," LePiane said.

According to Dusty Deschamps, the chairman of the Missoula Gambling Commission, the raid is a "new priority established by the new police chief," Doug Chase.

Although Chase couldn't be reached yesterday for comment, Deschamps said that the city detectives will be checking the bars more frequently for unlicensed gambling devices.

The Brewery, 158 Ryman, was the first bar to have its keno machine taken, Deschamps said.

Max Weiss, the owner of The Brewery, bought the machine from Harry Northey, owner of Odyssey Video and Vending last spring.

According to Northey, he informed Weiss that the keno machine license was up for renewal July 1, 1984. Weiss, however, let the license expire.

Deschamps pointed out that not only is it illegal to operate an unlicensed gambling device, but it is also illegal for a person to transfer a gambling device from one place to another and from one owner to another without the permission of the Gambling Commission.

"It's important that we know who's in charge of the gambling licenses," Deschamps said. If not, once someone got a gambling license, which costs $450 a year, they could sell it to whoever they wanted, he explained.

A summons for Weiss to appear in court the week of Jan. 30 was mailed to Weiss' home but he never received it, Deschamps said. Another summons was then issued to Weiss at The Brewery.

Weiss will appear in court Monday at 2 p.m., Deschamps said.

Possession of an unlicensed gambling device is a misdemeanor and is subject to six months in jail and a $500-$1,000 fine, Deschamps said.

Mortar Board lecture given

By Liz Deters
Kaimin Reporter

A Rolls Royce would today cost $2 and get two million miles to the gallon if automobile technology was advancing as fast as computer technology, Gene Schliedermayer, the speaker for the Last Lecture Series told a group of about 40 Wednesday evening.

The series, sponsored by the University of Montana Mortar Board, was held in the University Center Lounge.

Schliedermayer, a UM computer science assistant professor, combined wit and humor with facts to deliver the lecture entitled "2005?" Schliedermayer stressed the point that computer technology is advancing so rapidly that "who knows what's around the bend?"

Schliedermayer said a computer circuit costing $50,000 ten years ago could be purchased today for $10. A computer "as big as a football field" in 1952 now fits on "half a penny," he said.

Computers have invaded society, Schliedermayer said.

Because of the computers' high capabilities, "it could be very scary" by the year 2000, Schliedermayer said. "But I don't feel that computers will take over the world."

grant programs."

The Reagan administration's proposal hits middle income people hardest since families earning more than $30,000 will be ineligible for any federal aid, she added.

Under Reagan's proposal, aid packages can't exceed $4,500 a year, Kinsley said. Therefore, out of state students and students with families to support may not be able to get enough federal aid to attend UM.

In addition to the proposed federal student aid cuts, the state work study program is up for appropriation at the Montana Legislature, Kinsley noted. Also, the Montana Board of Regents plans to increase tuition and fees for next year. Already, Kinsley said, a Montana resident pays $4,400 a year at UM, while non-residents pay $6,600.

Clarification

A story in Wednesday's Kaimin on the "rainbow coalition" planning to run on the upcoming ASUM ballot stated that "organizations included in the coalition are the Kyi-Yo Indian Club, the International Student Union, the Women's Resource Center, the Wilderness Institute, the ASUM Day Care Committee and Phoenix." Only certain members or employees of those organizations are involved in the coalition. The organizations themselves are neither members of, nor endorse, any student slate.
